

I would like to request that the FCC not implement any measures that would lessen the effectiveness of the Indiana privacy act. It's nice to be able to sit down and enjoy supper without being interrupted by sales-persons. If I need something, I go out and buy it. I don't need telephone calls to prompt me. In fact, I have never bought anything as a result of telephone solicitation, so that should tell you just how effective this tactic is among the general public. Since the Indiana privacy act went into effect, the amount of calls we received went down drastically. Those we received afterwards stopped after I informed them to remove me from their lists. Leave the Indiana Privacy Act alone. If you need something to do, do something about this damn email spam. THAT is what's getting ridiculous!
